How to Clean Stone Window Sills.

In the September Woman's Home Companion appears a department called "The Exchange" in which readers give each other the benefit of practical suggestions that have developed out of housekeeping experience. A Missouri woman tells as follows how to clean stone steps or stone window sills:

"Get five cents' worth of the coarsest sandpaper and rub stone steps or stone window sills until all marks are removed, then simply dust them with a duster or a rag. They will stay white much longer by using this method than scrubbing them with water. I always wear a pair of canvas gloves, as they protect the hands from any scratching."

KNOWS SOME OF FRANK SLAYERS

The Governor Delays Arrests Till He Gets All

THE DEFENSE OF THE LYNCHERS

Marietta Paper Outspoken—Warning Against Meddlers

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 23.—That Gov. Harris has discovered the identity of several of Leo M. Frank's lynchers was reported on good authority here Saturday. Arrests were being delayed, it was said, to avoid putting others of the lynching band on their guard.

The governor, it was said, has received many threatening letters, and Saturday morning many protests poured in upon him against permitting what the writers termed "outside interference" in the Frank lynching inquiry.

Publicly voicing this resentment against meddling in the case was the Marietta Journal, believed to be the only Georgia newspaper, except Tom Watson's Jeffersonian, that has approved the lynching openly, which said editorially Saturday:

"We regard the hanging as an act of law abiding citizens. Frank's body was not marred by any mark of violence. Leo Frank was not scratched nor was a hair of his head harmed."

Gov. Harris added his own protest against any such interference in his statement announcing that he would call a conference of the judges, solicitors and sheriffs of Cobb and Baldwin counties to take action in the case. He used these words:

"If the members of the mob are brought to justice it will be through the courageous efforts of Georgia officials and courts, supported by the sentiment of the citizens of the state, and not through the newspaper editorials and resolutions of indignation and offers of reward coming from other states. I am afraid these things will only serve to aggravate a situation that already is deeply humiliating to our people and if they continue will eventually in a great deal more harm than good by defeating the efforts of the state to apprehend the guilty parties."

CANAL ZONE POPULATION.

Only About 30,000 Persons Left There Now.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 23.—Population of the canal zone has decreased 20 per cent., or 7,780 persons, within a year. By police census taken July 10 last, the total population was 29,926, not including employees of the canal and railroad living outside of the zone and in Panama. The decrease is attributed to the practical completion of the canal and the consequent reduction in the number of employees.

PARCEL POST INSURANCE.

The Limit is Now to be Raised from $50 to $100.

Washington, Aug. 23.—Change in postal regulations, effective Sept. 1, was made at Washington Saturday by which parcel post mail may be insured up to $100. Heretofore the limit has been $50. For valuations from $50 to $100 the fee will be 25 cents, in addition to postage.

A Stenographer With Initiative.

In the "About People" department of the September Woman's Home Companion appears a little article about Miss Florence Fisher, a successful New York stenographer who makes a specialty of reporting conventions. She is now the head of a firm of stenographers with representatives in many cities. Following is an extract from the article about her:

"She calls herself 'a convention reporter,' for her chosen field is the complicated work of recording the proceedings of big meetings and conventions all over the country. She was born in England, brought up in Canada, learned stenography for fun, and practiced it in earnest when a change in the family fortunes made that course desirable. She served her apprenticeship in a publishing house and after a varied experience as a stenographer, she obtained her first contract for reporting a convention—the meeting of a philanthropic association—and made good. Since then she has reported many conventions, directing a staff of assistants, and recently within nine months visited 15 cities in the United States and Canada in the course of her work. Miss Fisher considers her present specialty perhaps less lucrative but far more interesting than court reporting, and suggests that it offers an admirable field for women with a good general education, with energy, adaptability and self control, with capacity for organizing and zeal for the study of details."

How to Use September Vegetables.

In the September Woman's Home Companion, the cookery editor supplies a page of recipes, showing housekeepers what use to make of September vegetables. Following is a recipe given for vegetable chowder:

"Cut fat salt pork in pieces, try out and strain. There should be one-third cupful. Add four slices of onion finely chopped and cook five minutes. Strain and add two cupsful of one-half-inch potato cubes and one and one-fourth cupful of one-third-inch cubes of parsnips. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, add two cupsful of boiling water, bring to the boiling point and let boil until vegetables are soft, then add one quart of milk, four tablespoonsful of butter, bit by bit, one-half cupful of fine cracked cornmeal and two tablespoonsful of finely chopped parsley."

GOT $5,000 FROM BERNSTORFF.

Braun, Editor of "Fair Play," Had Aid from German Embassy.

New York, Aug. 23.—Facsimiles of a letter and a check for $5,000, both bearing the signature of "J. Bernstorff," were published in the New York World Saturday in an attempt to show that the pro-German propaganda in this country has received financial support from the German ambassador in Washington. The check, which is drawn on Kuhn, Loeb & Co., is made payable to the Fair Play Printing & Publishing Co. The date of the check is May 28, 1915.

The letter, which is dated March 15, is addressed to Marcus Braun, editor of Fair Play, a pro-German periodical. It bears the heading of the German embassy in Washington and the file number, "J. No. 4344." The letter reads: "My dear Mr. Braun: In answer to your favor of 12th instant, I beg to say that I have read the monthly review, Fair Play, for the last three years, and I can state that this publication has been living up to its name, and that it has always taken the American point of view. During the last several months Fair Play has, in its editorial policy, treated all belligerents justly and thereby rendered great services to the millions of foreign born citizens of this country, especially to those of German and Austro-Hungarian origin. Fair Play has fought for the rights of the latter and for truth, always maintaining an American attitude and showing true American spirit."

"You are at liberty to show this letter to anybody who is interested in the matter, but I beg you not to publish it, as to do this would be contrary to the instructions of my government, who does not wish me to publicly advertise any reviews of newspapers. Very sincerely yours, 'J. Bernstorff.'"

Marcus Braun, who is at present in Europe, has been a prominent figure in Republican and Progressive politics on the east side. He is a Hungarian.

They Found Out Who Got the Graft.

In the September Woman's Home Companion Anna Steese Richardson, writing "Mrs. Larry's Adventures in Thrift," tells how certain Long Island farmers have solved the problem of selling their garden stuff to New York consumers at a fair profit. When they began they found that with the best of tomatoes to sell they could make no profit. Indeed their books showed a loss. They did the natural thing—made a careful investigation of the New York marketing situation. What they discovered is described in the following extract taken from Mrs. Richardson's article:

"That investigation proved to us that the commission men of New York City had the Standard Oil Co. and the meat trust beaten a thousand miles. Among those to whom we had shipped, we found seven speculators, men who never handled or saw the goods. One man sold immediately to another firm, which proved to be his wife; another man secured three commissions by selling our produce to the green grocers through two other 'firms'—one was his wife, the other his nine-year-old son. You see, in case of any trouble he could show two sales."

"We found men who had no offices, who had no bank account for their business, who had no clerks, who had no absolutely no expenses, but who were making big money off the producer and the consumer. One was had an elegant home in Brooklyn and a beautiful summer place in Maine. He owned a steam yacht and three automobiles, but he did not contribute one single cent to the upkeep of New York City, in which he did his business, nor to New York state. He was not even paying a license as an ordinary peddler would have to do. He did not have to file an statement of his financial returns with the state treasurer, as other business concerns do—yet he was getting enormously rich on his own. He was only one of the men who had promised us to sell at the best prices which grocers were paying, minus the commission. And our returns were six or eight cents a bushel for tomatoes!"

HUGHES ON CANDIDACY

Text of His Letter in Regard to Possible Presidential Nomination

SAYS HE HAS NO RIGHT TO BE A CANDIDATE

Jurist Asks That No Steps Be Taken to Bring Name Before Convention

New York, Aug. 23.—Neither openly nor tacitly will Justice Charles E. Hughes of the supreme court allow his name to be used in connection with the presidential nomination of 1916.

The exact text of the letter of the justice in reply to ex-Gov. Stokes of New Jersey declining the support offered him is published to-day with the approval of the justice. Justice Hughes in response to an inquiry telegraphed from Rangel, Me., that he thought it best in view of published statements in the past few days that the letter should be made public. The letter follows:

"Washington, May 20, 1915. 'My dear Governor: Your letter of May 17 has been received. I think that my recent statement covers the ground. It seems to me very clear that as a member of the supreme court I have no right to be a candidate either openly or secretly. I cannot do my work here and hold an equivocal position before the country. I must, therefore, ask that no steps be taken to bring my name before the convention. With cordial regard, I am, very sincerely yours,

Charles E. Hughes. 'The Hon. Edward C. Stokes, 'Mechanics' National Bank, 'Trenton, N. J.'"

Justice Hughes' announcement conveyed in this letter comes as a decided disappointment to the Republican leaders, some of whom have entertained the hope that in view of Theodore Roosevelt's willingness to co-operate with a "man like Hughes," the justice would solve the Republican difficulty of 1916. The Hughes movement is under considerable momentum in some parts of the country, and it is reported that the party leaders have been working at a scheme to offer him a unanimous nomination, which, it is felt, the justice would not be able to decline.

The explicit refusal of Justice Hughes is believed to mark an epoch in the relations of the members of the supreme court to political preferment. In the history of that great tribunal there have been men notably fitted to be the nation's chief executive and they have not explicitly refused to have their names before the country in connection with the presidency. Among historians there has always been the feeling that members of the supreme court should feel themselves out of any political activity. There have been notable examples of presidential ambitions among the members of that tribunal. Chief Justice Chase had long aspired to the presidency and did not relinquish the ambition after he became head of the bench. Judge Stephen Field did not hesitate to give some encouragement to the Democratic leaders.

Some friends of Justice Hughes declare that his letter ends that expectation on the part of the Republican leaders, that he would accept a nomination if the convention appealed to him unanimously. "The justice is a candid man," said ex-Gov. Stokes, "and I take it to mean that he couldn't accept a nomination from the convention if it came to him without his having consented to efforts to bring the event about."

The letter of Justice Hughes was sent in response to one from Mr. Stokes telling of the excitement with which many New Jersey citizens desired his nomination. The justice was appealed to in the light of his duty to the country and the confidence the people have in him.

MISS STRACHAN OUT.

Defeated Candidate for Presidency of N. E. A. Withdraws.

Oakland, Cal., Aug. 23.—Miss Grace Strachan, district superintendent of schools in Brooklyn, N. Y., has resigned from the national education association, it became known here Saturday, following her defeat in a bitter contest for the presidency of the organization. Miss Strachan charges that her defeat for the presidency of the association was brought about by unfair means and factional disloyalty. "I have no regard for the National Education association," said Miss Strachan, in commenting upon her action. "I have sent in my resignation and it should be in the hands of the secretary by this time." Delegates to the convention are discussing the question whether Miss Strachan's action forecasts a split in the association.

At a stormy session of the convention, Miss Strachan vainly sought to address the delegates just before the election. She forced the question to a ballot and was defeated by a vote of 479 to 184. Dr. David Bancroft Johnson, president of Winthrop normal and industrial college of Rock Hill, S. C., being elected president.

A Medieval Tale

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Medieval times were prolific of stories of the 'evil, who was supposed to be going about making bargains for souls. A great many such tales illustrating his methods have been handed down to us from that age in which they were believed by those who circulated them. Here is one that has remained dormant for many years. It was told me by an American multimillionaire who bought a castle in Germany and found the legend among papers that had not been disturbed for hundreds of years.

Count Caspar Ardenreid, the lord of the castle in question, was in love with Bertha, the daughter of a neighboring Baron Cronsheld. There had been a feud between the families, and Cronsheld refused the young count the hand of his daughter.

One evening the count was sitting in his cabinet, disconsolate that he must be deprived of his love, when the door opened and a man entered wearing a pointed beard and an upturned mustache.

"Who are you," asked the count, "and how did you gain access to me unannounced?" "I am the devil," was the response, "and I have come to help you to win the hand of the girl you love."

"Leave me; you will require a soul to pay for your assistance."

"You are right. I must have the soul of your firstborn child."

"Begone, I say; I will have nothing to do with you."

"Then you must give up all hope of a union with the Countess Bertha. Her father will never yield."

The devil stuck to his work, conversing with the count and constantly getting him under his satanic influence. Caspar asked him how he would accomplish his object, and he said the baron was a skillful chess player. The devil would tempt him into playing a game, the winner to name a husband for his daughter. Caspar, who was desperately in love, finally consented, but only after wringing from the devil a certain condition. He might redeem his child's soul if he could beat the devil at a game of chess. This did not seem likely, but it was the only hope Satan would give.

The bargain having been struck, Satan sent the baron word that he had heard of his remarkable skill at chess and challenged him to a contest. The baron, much flattered, invited the challenger to his castle. Satan appeared in the person of an agreeable young man giving evidence by his rich attire and general largeness of being a grand personage. He told the baron that he would play him a game of chess, the stake to be what he had named to Caspar. The baron, supposing that he wanted Bertha for himself, consented. Of course the devil beat the baron, and the winner named for a husband for his daughter Count Caspar Ardenreid. The baron consented, cursing the trickster at the same time and wondering why he had befriended the lovers.

Since there was nothing against Count Caspar but the feud with which he had nothing to do, Baron Cronsheld made the best of it and soon became attached to his son-in-law. Caspar told him how he had won his consent and what he had agreed to pay for it. This excited the old man to spend a great deal of time studying difficult chess problems in order that when the devil came to claim his grandchild he might redeem him by beating the arch fiend at his own game. He was so proud of his ability as a chess player that he really aspired to beat the devil.

The day a man child was born to the count and countess was both a happy and a sad one. The lady had learned from her husband the secret that her baby's soul must go to the devil, and since she was very religious the calamity was the more awful. Her father assured her that her son was safe, for it had been stipulated that if any one could be found to beat the devil at chess the bargain would be off. He (the baron) had learned a number of combinations any one of which was sure to win.

The mother proposed that the baby be baptized at once, hoping that this might forestall Satan, but before it could be done he appeared and claimed the child's soul. Since all depended on a chess contest the count proposed that three games be played between the baron and the devil, two games to win. So they sat down at once and began to play. Satan said he would play the first game. He moved his king's pawn and the count moved his king's pawn. The count moved his queen's pawn and the devil moved his queen's pawn. The count moved his knight and the devil moved his knight. The count moved his bishop and the devil moved his bishop. The count moved his rook and the devil moved his rook.
